

The Southern World: Journal of a Deputation from the Wesleyan Conference to Australia and Polynesia; Including Notes of a Visit to the Gold-Fields (Classic Reprint)

Author of the following pages having in eighteen months passed over a large portion of the globe, his remarks on the different countries visited are necessarily brief. He has described things as they appeared to him; and although interspersing his journal with several miscellaneous subjects, he has endeavoured to keep in view the object of his mission. No labour has been spared to obtain correct information on the various topics introduced: and he would here gratefully acknowledge his obligation to the Missionaries and other gentlemen, for the readiness and clearness with which they answered his numerous inquiries, and thus put him in possession of much valuable information, which he could not otherwise have obtained. It was the Author's intention to have offered some suggestions on Emigration; but having seen that other writers have anticipated him, and furnished much suitable advice to emigrants, the only remarks which he would now venture to make on the subject are these: If people are doing well at home, they had better be content to remain there, lest, like many he has met with, they should change for the worse.
