Effect of the Defeat on Long Island--State of the Army--Negotiation with Lord Howe--Preparations of the Enemy for cutting off the communication between the main army and the Eastern States--Shameful flight at Efixps Bay--Evacuation of JViewYork--Reflections--Arrangement of Congress for a rigorous prosecution of the War--Spirited conduct of the troops who had lately fled at the approach of an Enemy--Retreat to the White Plains--Loss of Fort Washington--Evacuation of Fort Lee--Melancholy prospect of the Americans--Reflections, The effect produced on the minds of the militia by their recent defeat on Long Island, may be seen by the following extracts from letters written by officers, high in command, among the Americans. General Mercer, who commanded the flying camp, wrote thus on the subject: General Washington has not, so far as I have seen, five thousand men to be depended upon for the service of a campaign, and I have not one thousand. Both our armies are composed of new militia, perpetually fluctuating between the camp and their farms. These are not a match for, were their numbers equal, veteran troops, well fitted and urged on by able officers. Numbers and discipline must prevail at last. Giving soldiers, or even the lower orders of mankind, the choice of officers, will forever mar the discipline of armies. General Mercer was right. That choice of officers entrusted to the common soldier, was, of itself, enough to destroy all subordination. The officers became dependent upon their men; and they who would concede most, be most familiar, and least rigorous, Vol. i. 60 were always sure of preference. Few men will voluntarily elect masters. And no officer can be useful, unless he is master of his soldiers. Washington began soon after his r...
